"Hey [Name]! This is TJ over at TuffShed in Saint Charles — how's it going?"

So I'm reaching out because you had shown some interest in a shed or garage — I wanted to touch base and see if we could get you a solid quote before our current promotion wraps up.

Quick question — what size were you thinking, and are you working with a slab already or going straight on the ground?

[LISTEN — then say:] Okay perfect, yeah I've got a couple options that'll work great for that. Let me throw some numbers at you real quick — you got two minutes?"

 Goal: Get them talking. Once they answer a question, they're engaged. Move fast to the quote.

So I'm just following up on that quote I put together for you — I know life gets busy, totally get it. Just wanted to see if you had any questions or if anything changed on your end.

[PAUSE — let them respond]

[If hesitating on price:] Yeah I hear you — actually, we do have a promotion running right now that could bring that number down a bit. You want me to walk you through it real quick?

[If timing is the issue:] Makes total sense. Are you thinking spring/summer, or more of a fall project? I just want to make sure I can still lock in today's pricing for you when you're ready."

💡 Two objection paths: price → mention promo. Timing → anchor the price so they feel urgency without pressure.

⚡ Quick Reference — Objection Handlers

KEEP THESE IN YOUR BACK POCKET

Objection	Your Response
"Too expensive"	"Yeah I get that. We actually have financing options — some folks do as low as $99/month. Want me to run those numbers for you?"
"Need to think about it"	"Of course. Just a heads up — lumber costs have been climbing with the tariffs, so today's price is really tomorrow's discount. No rush, just something to keep in mind."
"Not ready yet"	"Totally fine — when's your target timeframe? I can lock in pricing now so you're covered whenever you pull the trigger."
"Getting other quotes"	"Smart move. When you compare, just make sure you're looking at the same gauge steel and warranty. A lot of guys cut corners there. Happy to walk you through what sets ours apart — takes two minutes."
